

Please reconsider the BPL ruling until until FCC engineering conducts interference tests on a small system. The possibilities that the radiation from power lines may seriously contaminate the rf spectrum, disrupting existing communications. If we must rely on the power companies to repair excessive leakage it will will be an exercise in futility and excessive damage could be the norm, rather than the exception. Thank you